> His associates and friends, the members of the bar, in taking this formal notice of Mr. Miller's death, desire not only to express their personal sorrow, but to place on record their high sense of his worth as a man and of his standing as a lawyer. The man was generous to a fault, hospitable and public-spirited; the attorney was fond of his profession, jealous of its honor, capable, faithful in any extremity to his clients and always tenscious, forcible and zealous in the assertion and protection of their interests. His clients became and remained his friends. The subject of these resolutions was upon three occasions the servant of the public, having held the offices of circuit court clerk, of attorney for the county of Lincoln, and of delegate for the same county to the constitutional convention

In each of these positions he acquitted himself with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the people, and dis played the same high and manly qualities which illustrated and distinguished his entire professional and private life. To the end that this memorial be perpetuated, it is respectfully asked that it be spread at large upon the order book o the circuit court for Lincoln county.

It was moved and seconded that the foregoing resolutions be adopted, spread at large on the records of this court, published in the Stanford papers, and that a copy be furnished the family of the deceased. All of said motions carried. After remarks by Mr. J. W. Alcorn and  Col. T. P. Hill, the meeting adjourned. T. P. HILL, Chmn.

Mckinley may be a good, honest plodding kind of a politician, but in point of ability he is not up to the average of the statesmen who should occupy the exalted position of president of this Republic. In fact, to judge him by his speeches and other performances, he is an exceedingly mediocre man, who owes his advancement to chance and the fact that certain men and classes know that they can use him. The Courier-Journal fitly describes him when it says he is "the most stolid of trimmers, the most pliable of invertebrates, the most vacuous of incapables.

And Hobart! Whoever heard of Hobart till a week or two ago? Old Senator Beck's inquiry when President Clevland appointed Buck minister to Peru h-l is Buck?" The country is inquirnobody can tell. THE Mason and Foard Co., the abuse of which has boosted many a short horse politician, who sought preferment by that ignoble method, has been vindicated. Several years ago the State was induced to sue it for $90,000 and over. After a long drawn-out trial before Judge Cantrill at Frankfort, a judgment of $14,-000 was found against the company. An appeal was taken and Friday our higher court handed down an opinion, that the company not only did not owe the State a cent, but on the contrary, the State owed it $11,000. We have all along said that the men composing the company are honorable gentlemen, who would scorn to stoop to a mean act and have on various occasions told its traducers that they were abusing their betters. We know the gentlemen composing the Mason-Foard Co., and know whereof we speak when we say that the characters of the Virginia if McKinley is elected, but what there is contingent, as well as the others, are above reproach.

HIS TRIP A FAILURE.

He Spent Two Weeks In Rome, but Was Not Observing Enough.

The man with side whiskers had ing the man with the goatee all about it. Of the half dozen listeners the old man in the seat ahead of him seemed to be the most deeply interested, and though he hitched about and evidently wanted to say something he held his peace for half an hour. Then he suddenly asked:

"Stranger, did you say you took in Rome on yer trip?"

"Yes, sir. I spent two weeks in Rome," was the reply.

"My darter was readin to me about Rome awhile ago. Purty nice town,

"Didn't, eh? You must have bin purty busy. Was hay a purty fair crop around there last summer?'

"I wasn't interested in the hay question. As a traveler, I went to see the sights, you know."

"Yes, I understand. See any turnips or cabbages to brag of?"

"No, I didn't include those in the sights." "And you didn't inquire the price of beeswax?"

"No, sir." clover seed or timothy was wurth?"

"No, sir." "Any idea what fresh pork brings there along about hog killin time?" persisted the old man. "My dear sir," replied the traveler with a patronizing smile, "I went to Rome to see its celebrated ruins." "And you didn't even ask the price of fresh grass butter?"

"No." "Nor find out if mutton was skeerce or plenty?"

"No." "Waal, that may be yer way of Rome and can't even tell the price of York World.
